SEEDS OF FRIENDSHIP

A Gray Hawk Story

IT WAS A San-To, the planting moon, and all of the tribespeople of the Otapi were busy in their fields planting the spring crop of maize. Carefully they plowed and loosened the rich black soil, then planted the little yellow grains one by one! All of the members of the tribe worked at this task; the little children, the striplings, the squaws and the husky grown warriors. Side by side bent young Gray Hawk and his chieftain father Gray Eagle.

Suddenly there was the sound of a horse riding up, and the men of the Otapi straightened, instantly alert. There had been rumors of the Shawanga, a distant plains tribe, going on the warpath—and they had to be prepared for trouble. But this was no Shawanga, but a white farmer. Clad in brown homespun, with a shaggy yellow beard that fell to his chest, he reined his giant plowhorse in and waved a hand in friendly greeting.

"Howdy," he called. "I'm Tom Cooley, gents. Been farming forty acres down near Fort Patterson! My corn seed went mouldy in the overland trip so I thought I'd come by to see if you'd lend . . . or sell me some. Soldiers over at the fort said you Otapi were peaceable!"

Gray Eagle spoke in reply, his face expressionless. "We are peaceable, white man, but we will not lend or sell you our maize. Why should we help you take over our land? No!"

As the broad-shouldered chief turned away, his son caught at his arm. "But father," Gray Hawk protested, "this white man is friendly! We should be neighborly with him! Let us give him enough maize seed to make a first crop!"

Gray Eagle scowled at his impetuous son. "No!" he said, "it is our will . . . the will of the elders of the Otapi. Now, white man, go!"

Tom Cooley rode off, disappointed. But late that afternoon, when he reached the crude log cabin that he called home, he found Gray Hawk waiting for him with a deerskin filled with corn seed. The Indian youth explained that he was doing this against the will of the elders because he believed it to be right! He would accept nothing in payment, but hurried off swiftly through the forest . . .

When Gray Hawk arrived at the camp of the Otapis, he found his father and several other tribesmen waiting for him grimly. "You were seen going into the forest carrying a heavy deerskin," the chief began. "Where is that skin, my son?"

Silently, the boy held it forward. The chief examined it, turned it inside-out, and frowned to see several tiny corn seeds drop from its creases. "So . . ." he said heavily, "you disobeyed our will, Gray Hawk . . ."

The youth drew himself up, proudly and ram-rod stiff. His eyes scanned the bitter suspicious countenance of his elders. As one, they stared at him. "Yes—I did," he replied eagerly. "I know that the white men have treated us badly in the past, but these settlers who have begun to farm near Fort Patterson wish to live only in peace. We should help them and live side by side with them! I brought him the maize; it was my own. I had raised it last year. Am I to be punished for that?"

As he confronted the surly older warriors of the tribe, there was a moment of tense silence!

Then, suddenly, a shriek rent the air, and an eagle-feathered shaft fell to the ground at their feet! It was striped red and black, the war token of the Shawanga tribe! Evidently the plains warriors had decided to attack! Even now they circled the Otapi village, stalking behind bushes and scrub trees! Their tomahawks were in hand, their arrow notches fitted to their taut bowstrings. The tribe was in grave danger . . .

"Quick!" shouted Gray Eagle, "take cover! Squaws and papooses in the community tepees! You braves—get behind those boulders! Hold the Shawanga off!"

Swiftly, the warriors of the Otapi raced to do their leader's bidding.

All thought of his impending punishment forgotten, Gray Hawk found himself behind a gnarled oak with two other Otapi braves. In the forest that surrounded the village lurked the war-painted party of Shawanga fighters. Many in number, fierce and powerful, they were a dreadful foe. Now the arrows began to hiss through the air and the long lances with barbs that were like a pickerel's backbone! More than one Otapi fighter fell forward, choking on his lifeblood, as the Shawanga braves shouted cruel cries of triumph. But the invaders were not going unscathed! Again and again, the accurate fire of the Otapi archers struck home and Otapi tomahawks clove the skulls of those Shawanga warriors who were unwary enough to venture into waiting ambushes . . .

So the battle continued equally as night-fall crept over the forest. The Otapi elders gathered in worried consultation, leaving a few sentries to guard against surprise attacks. "We are in deadly peril," husked Gray Eagle. "The attack was too sudden—we had no time to fetch water or food to the village in special stores. If they continue to encircle us we will soon run out of water! We will grow weak—and they will triumph! They are too many for us even now, for several of our young braves are off on hunting trips . . ."

Gray Hawk lifted his head eagerly. "Perhaps I could get down to the creek to fetch water, father," he began. "Or perhaps I might even get through the Shawanga lines, to fetch help . . ."

His father shook his head grimly. "No chance of that! They would be too clever—too alert, to let you pass by. And even if you could get through—who could we call upon for help? Our hunting parties are too far away. No, we must fight it out ourselves!"

So it went! Through the next day and night, they fought off the persistent Shawanga attacks. But now the food was all gone and the water too! Already the pangs of thirst were beginning to weaken the tired Otapi braves who had been without rest for so long. Now the enemy warriors were beginning to gather for another deadly assault! Gray Hawk and the others could see them flitting through the bushes in greater numbers. Evidently they had been joined by reinforcements! Could there be any stopping them?

Again a red and black striped arrow streaked through the air—and the attack was on!

But suddenly, as the Shawanga filled the air with jubilant boasts of triumph, a new sound was heard!

It was the thin, brassy blast of a trumpet—and with it came a storm of blue-coated white men! Army troopers from Fort Patterson suddenly blazed through the brush, firing their heavy Springfield rifles at the surprised Shawanga attackers! Given new hope, the Otapi rushed forward, sending deadly volleys of arrows at the Shawanga. Caught between two merciless attacks, the plains Indians wavered, and then, shrieking in fear, fled. A few of them were cut down in flight, but the others stampeded safely into the forest, leaving their weapons behind, flung to every side . . .

Up rode a white officer, reining in his excited bay.

"Chief!" he shouted, spying Gray Eagle, "glad to see we got here in time! We've had orders to prevent marauding among the Indian tribes in this section—but we sure wouldn't have known about this in time to act if it hadn't been for Tom Cooley here!"

He waved a thumb at the big, yellow-bearded farmer who ran up, clutching a long musket. "Shucks," Cooley exclaimed, "I started to come up here yesterday to thank you folks for the store of corn the boy left me when I heard sounds of a battle. As soon as I saw you were being attacked by the Shawanga, I figured they'd want to know about it at Fort Patterson. So I hurried over there and the captain and his boys volunteered to put a stop to the ruckus. I reckon if you really want to thank someone, Chief, it'd be the boy yonder!"

ALL EYES turned toward Gray Hawk, standing battle-stained and weary.

The chief put a hand on his son's shoulder and said proudly, "It is not the first time we owe him thanks for saving our tribe! But this time, he has taught us something new—that seeds of corn may also be seeds of friendship!"

LOADED WITH RATTLES,
COYOTES, WILDCATS AND BUZZARDS!

HE'S RIGHT! I CAN'T LET HER DIE HELPLESSLY!
MAKE TRACKS,
PARD!

HELP!
HURRY!

THANK HEAVEN
SHE'S STILL ALIVE!
COMING, BETTY!

AND THOSE LOWDOWN COYOTES CUT
DOWN THE BRIDGE THAT WAS HERE!
ONLY WAY ACROSS IS TO JUMP! BUT FOR A HORSE, IT'S THE LONGEST JUMP I'VE EVER SEEN!

I'LL EXPLAIN TO THE SHERIFF AND BRING THE POSSE, MONTE!

RIGHT, BETTY! BACK TO THE CABIN FOR ME! MAKE TRACKS, PARD!

I ONLY HOPE IT'S NOT TOO LATE AND PURDY AND COYOTE CAL DIDN'T STORM THE CABIN BY NOW AND WIPE OUT THE DOBBINSONS!

JAIL

BUT THE BRAVE PIONEER FAMILY STILL HOLDS OUT, FIGHTING TO THE LAST DITCH!

AND FINALLY---TO THE LAST BULLET!

MONTE HALE ARRIVES AND...

NO MORE AMMUNITION! BE BRAVE, MA AND TOMMY! THIS IS IT!

OH, OH, THE DOBBINSONS ARE OUT OF AMMUNITION! IT'S UP TO US, PARD! I'VE GOT A PLAN!

BANG!

CLICK!

CLICK! CLICK!

IS THE COWBOY HERO RIDING TO CERTAIN DEATH?

COME ON, PARD! IF MY AIM IS TRUE, ONE SHOT IS ALL I NEED TO GET---

---THAT BUSH! IF I BURST ENOUGH OF THOSE PODS AND LET THE FINE SPORES SPREAD LIKE DUST, A FIT OF SNEEZING WILL GET THE BADMEN!

BANG!

BANG!

POP!

POP!

POP!

KACHOO!

AAAAH CHOO!

KACHOO!

IT WORKED! THEY ALL GOT A BIG DOSE! IT'S LIKE HAYFEVER!

KACHOO!

GESUNDEHEIT!

BAM!

BEFORE THE CONFUSION IS OVER AND THE BADMEN CAN RECOVER, THE POSSE ARRIVES!

YOUR GOOSE IS COOKED,
PURDY! LET ME INTRODUCE
YOU TO THE WELL-KNOWN
PRICKLY PLANT!

OWW!

AND THAT OTHER BUSH WAS A RARE ONE KNOWN AS THE SNEEZE BUSH OR PEPPER BUSH!
AND I KNOW YOUR BIG SECRET
NOW, PURDY! I FIGURED IT OUT! I SHOULD HAVE SUSPECTED BEFORE!

GIN GINS! A VALUABLE MEDICINAL
HERE THAT SELLS AS HIGH AS A
HUNDRED DOLLARS A POUND! YOU
FOUND THE WOODS HERE LOADED WITH IT! GREEN GOLD! WORTH A FORTUNE! SO
YOU PLOTTED TO WIPE OUT THE HOME-STEADERS AND CASH IN ON IT!

LATER...

WE WON'T EVEN HAVE TO FARM NOW, JUST PICK
GINSENG LEAVES AND SELL THEM!
HOW CAN WE REWARD YOU FOR WHAT YOU'VE DONE,
MONTE?

I JUST HAD MY REWARD, BETTY--
ONE OF MA
DOBBINSON'S
GOOD MEALS!

WELL, LET'S AMBLE ALONG,
PARO! IF THERE'S ANY MORE EXCITEMENT AHEAD, I KIND OF HATE THE THOUGHT OF MISSING IT!
